University of Chicago Library
1100 East 57th Street
Chicago, Illinois 60637 U.S.A.

Abstract Collected here are the papers of Gary Stanley Becker, going back more than seventy years, covering a host of topics in economics, government, and the social sciences. Rich in the studies of microeconomics that shaped and reshaped the discipline, the documents also record the major actors in the field of economics who served as Becker's interlocutors, coauthors, and the many students he mentored and taught at both Columbia University and the University of Chicago.

Acknowledgments

The Gary S. Becker Papers were processed and preserved with support from David G. Booth, MBA '71.

Biographical Note

Gary Stanley Becker (1930-2014) was born in Pottsville, Pennsylvania and lived there until he was about five years of age. His father had immigrated there from Montreal in the 1920s. He explained that his father and mother were not highly educated, although they expected him to do well in his studies and created an atmosphere in their home where debate on topics related to politics and social justice were encouraged. His father was a small businessman in the small coal mining town of Pottsville, but then uprooted and resettled in Brooklyn, New York where Becker would come of age. In Brooklyn, he once wrote, “I had the task of reading him [his father] stock quotations and other reports on financial developments. Perhaps that stimulated my interest in economics, although I was rather bored with it.”

Becker matriculated through Princeton University and graduated with a degree in economics from in 1951. Taking graduate courses and conducting research as an undergraduate inspired him to pursue graduate study in economics. He chose the University of Chicago over a few others. The University of Chicago would prove to be a significant homeplace to develop, experiment, and nurture new ideas. It was the site of his first teaching position and the place where he would meet his second wife, Guity Nashat. (With his first wife, Doria Slate, who he married in 1954, they had two daughters, Judy, and Catherine. Doria died in 1979.) Though his career would be marked and supported by many institutions, and richly document many places around the globe, Chicago features most prominently in his biography.

Becker taught at the University of Chicago before he earned his doctoral degree, from 1953 to 1957, and then from 1971 to 2014. The break from 1958 to 1969 he served on the faculty at Columbia University, along with an appointment at the National Bureau of Economic Research. It was Milton who ultimately influenced him to return to the University of Chicago, during a fellowship year at the university between 1969 and 1970, where he would spend the remainder of his career.

At the university of Chicago, he taught economics and sociology, and was also appointed to teach in the Graduate School of Business (GSB). He was appointed University Professor in economics in 1970 and served as chair of the department from 1984 to 1985. As well, he was appointed University Professor at GSB and in sociology in 1983. Becker’s service to the university came in many forms, including the Education Review Committee, faculty recruitment committees, the Becker-Friedman Institute, and the University of Chicago China Center Faculty Steering Committee.

His teaching and research seemed to span and traverse the academy. Becker also held research and related fellowship appointments at other institutions and organizations, including the Center for Economic Analysis of human Behavior and Social Institutions at the National Bureau of Economic Research (1957-1979), the Hoover Institution (1973—2014), the National Opinion Research Center’s Economics Research Center (1980-2014), the American Enterprise Institute for Public Policy Research (1987-1991), and the Ministry of Finance in Japan (1988-2005). He was considered a favorable thinker in many areas and became affiliated with a myriad other institutional bodies, including the University of Chicago Press, the American Enterprise Institute for Public Policy Research, the Manhattan Institute, UNext, the Lexecon Corp, the Committee to the Secretary of Defense, The New Center for Accelerating Medical Innovations, the Accenture Energy Advisory Board, LEAF Inc., and the Hoover Energy Task Force.

Early on in Gary Becker's academic career, he was primarily interested in the areas of inequality, class, race, and prestige, as related to the discipline of economics. His professors and other advisors at the time thought that he should switch to sociology or some other area of the social sciences. However, as he would his entire career, Becker persisted in a course of study that interested and challenged him most.

He considered ideas that subverted convention within economics and pressed against the boundaries of the discipline, for which he was quite criticized for much of his wanderings. Despite that, Becker was recognized for his work in the areas of human capital, economics of the family, economic analysis of crime and punishment, discrimination, population growth, education, old age support, health and medicine, drug policy, habits and addictions, altruism, and global markets. As an innovator and nonconventional thinker and researcher, Becker believed that economics could explain or improve upon many issues in society, and there was scarcely a subject that he did not explore. He pursued a research agenda where he adapted and subjected various concepts to economic thinking, including organ transplants, drug policy, consumption, teenage pregnancy, taxes, social welfare, division of labor, cancer research, despair, fear and terrorism, income inequality, preferences and values, price theory, environment and climate policy, social security, polygamy, lotteries, terminal care, child care policy, Medicare, women's progress and higher education, educational vouchers, generational mobility, military spending, global warming, public policy, leadership, income and happiness, immigration, macro behavior, politics, law, fertility, social interactions, time allocation, general inequality, quantity and quality of children, marriage and divorce, racial and sexual discrimination, cost and utility theory, risk neutrality, labor, and tastes. As well, there are many other subjects explored in the many comments, talks, and speeches that he delivered at various events and for a host of organizations and groups.

Milton Friedman was highly influential to Becker's epistemic origins in the broadening, expansion, and challenge of the discipline of economics and its many uses. He once wrote that he was forever changed, after completing a graduate course on price theory with Friedman, in 1951, that highlighted the importance of microeconomics. It ultimately taught him how much a tool economics could be in nearly every facet of life and made of him a proponent of "non-conventional economics." As such, he has been described as "one of the most original and influential economists in the history of economics as a science ." Becoming such a thinker, other advisors, and mentors he would cite included George Stigler, H. Gregg Lewis, Theodore W. Shultz, Aaron Director, and L. J. Savage.

Gary Becker was active in many academic and professional organizations, societies, and groups. For some of them he served in leadership like the American Economic Association (Vice President, 1974; President, 1987; Distinguished Fellow, 1988) and the Western Economic Association (Vice President, 1995-1996; President, 1996-1997). There were annual conferences and invited talks and whether he was invited to join or inducted for achievement or merit for his research and writings, he attended many events for the American Statistical Association, the National Academy of Education (of which he was a founding member), the Economic Society, the Mont-Pelerin Society, the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, the National Academy of Sciences, the International Union for Scientific Study of Population, the American Philosophical Society, the National Association of Business Economics, the Pontifical Academy of Sciences, and the National Academy of Sciences of Buenos Aires. Becker for much of his career was called upon through all of his associations to offer comments and ideas on several topics, both domestic and international. Rarely did he turn down the offer to share his thoughts.

With such vast activity in and outside of the academy, Becker, however, still maintained a prolific research, writing, and publishing program. Over his career he wrote and edited more than 14 books, nearly 100 academic papers, and hundreds of blogs, magazines, and newspaper columns. He produced a diverse body of work that has been celebrated in the academy and cited in popular publications, and public policy briefs. Among his most impactful works is The Economics of Discrimination (1957), an outgrowth of his dissertation work at the University of Chicago in economics, that initially was opposed by many economists but was sufficiently engaged by other scholars in the social sciences, namely sociology. Research that would eventually become Human Capital (1964) was his initial work at the National Bureau of Economic Research, when he moved to New York. Economic Theory (1971), an edited version of his course lectures at Columbia University between 1967 and 1968, was published with the aid of Michael Grossman and Robert Michael. His research and writings on economics of the family – some have argued – is the primary reason why he was awarded Nobel Prize. A Treatise on the Family (1981) became a major (and “controversial”) text in economics and sociology, with an enlarged edition being published in 1991. Of this publication, he wrote “Writing this book demanded intense intellectual concentration over a long time period. I became mentally exhausted, and I did not really regain my mental energies for a couple of years.”

Most of Becker’s publications would have origins in controversy; however, and perhaps despite this, the work would have a huge impact on the intellectual and sociopolitical climate in the academy and the attending and adjacent cultural institutions. As such, he was awarded the Nobel Prize in Economic Science in 1992. However, he had already gained attention of those in his field, receiving the W. W. Woytisky Award for Human Capital in 1964, the Hohn Bates Clark Medal in 1967, the Professional Achievement Award from the University of Chicago Alumni Association in 1968, the Frank E. Seidman Distinguished Award in Political Economy in 1985, the MERIT Award from the National Institutes of Health in 1986, and the John R. Commons Award from Omicron Delta Epsilon in 1987. Though these are the highlights, Becker would receive many honors and recognitions throughout his career—including the Medal of the Italian Presidency (2004) and the Presidential Medal of Freedom (2007).

Scope Note

The collection documents much of Gary Becker's intellectual history. One of his autobiographical essays, "A Personal Statement About My Intellectual Development" (see Box 120, Folder 10 and Box 189, Folder 1), traces his academic career from his youth to his origins as a student at Princeton University, to his graduate student years and professorship at the University of Chicago, and his extra collegial engagement on corporate advisory boards, political participation, and governmental councils. The essay could have been written based on some of the records collected here. The collection documents an intellectual trajectory primarily through intellectual productions, research files, and communications. His approach to the research and writing, his publishing history, his engagement with others in the field of economics and other individuals in public service and global politics are contained here. Though the collection primarily concerns his professional life, there is also mention of his relationship with Guity Nashat, his wife, as they traveled together to the many conferences and events in the United States and abroad, and other incidents of his life for a minor study or treatment of his biography.

The collection materials include Becker's handwritten and printed copies of his scholarship, including notes (and bibliographic cards), papers (and drafts), diagrams and charts, data sheets, correspondence, periodical reprints, magazines, newspapers and clippings, grant documents, reports, referee files, course and instructional materials, photographs, VHS tapes, DVD's, and related ephemera.

INVENTORY

Series I: Correspondence

The correspondence are both handwritten and printed communications between Gary Berker and various interlocuters (as well as his assistants, secretaries, students, and university administrators) in the United States and abroad. The letters are from individuals and organizations, although several are arranged here based on subject matter or name of research project. These communications are in the forms of printed emails, formal letters, memos, and notes. Most of the letters are invitations to participate in various causes, events, engagements, or publications. Along with letters, some folders include academic papers (and drafts) and journals, conference programs, travel itineraries, receipts, and newspaper clippings. The material in this series is dated from 1941-2014.

Series II: Writings

This series include Becker's major and minor publications for both academic and lay audiences. The subseries arrangement includes 1) The Academic Publications, 2) Blogs and Columns, and

3) Presentations. The Academic Publications, dated from 1951 to 2014) comprise Becker's earlier works, including a few papers from his undergraduate years at Princeton University. These works are most noted for Becker's commitment to theoretical treatments of ideas like human capital and income inequality. There are full (original) book length manuscripts, partial manuscripts, journal articles, and book chapters, in the form of handwritten papers on lined tablet sheets and print copies. There are drafts of several works replete with editorial markings and revision notes. The Blog and Columns contain drafts and printed copies of blogs and newspaper columns written by Becker (and some co-authored with colleagues, namely Richard Posner), dated from 1982 to 2014. Many of the folders contain a single composition; however, there are others that include handwritten drafts, newspaper clippings, reference sources, and related ephemera. There are also blog and column "management" files, mostly labeled as "lists." Some of the writings here have been collected and published as Uncommon Sense, with Richard Posner, in 2009; however, the communications that led to the publication like the copyrights and contracts are filed in the correspondence series. Becker also wrote columns for several international publications in Central and Latin America, Iceland, Europe, Russia, and Asia. The bulk of the foreign language documents are included here in Spanish, German, Russian, Japanese, Korean, Bosnian, Chinese, Polish, Kurdistan, Turkish, Icelandic, among a few others. Lastly, the Presentation subseries is the result of Becker's participation in his field and memberships in several organizations and societies, he presented many papers, lectures, and talks. The papers arranged here were drafted or completed for various events, between 1960 and 2014. Most of the papers were presented in the United States; however, as a global scholar and highly sought after public intellectual, with many connections, especially after his Nobel Prize notoriety, and the many learning and research communities abroad, and former international students, Becker was invited to speak around the globe. The arrangement for this subseries takes into account the event, place, and, at times, the title of the speech or paper.

Series III: Reference and Research Files

The reference and research files include academic papers collected by Becker or on his behalf by secretaries and assistants, and some folders also include the correspondence that was mailed with the publication. These are largely writings and publications by other economists or social scientists, including scholars domestic and abroad, and students at the University of Chicago (or former) and those studying at other institutions. The files are reprints (requested from periodicals), working papers, partial papers from dissertation announcements, and a few complete dissertations. Based on the attached letters most of the material here was sent to Becker for review and/or evaluation.

Series IV: Magazines, newspapers, and clippings

The magazines, newspapers, and clippings are items that were engaged by Becker for reading and research, on subjects regarding economics, politics, and internationalism or some closely regard area of the social sciences. They were acquired directly from the publisher or editors of the publications while others were “clipped” for Becker by his assistants or former students. There is one clipping however that was sent to him from one of his daughters inscribed, “Dad

– I remember you talking to me about this idea a long time ago” (see Box 187, Folder 19). The material is dated from 1986 to 2014 and includes those published in India, Toronto, London, Santiago, Buenos Aires, Dusseldorf, Mexico, Zurich, Madrid among several others. The newspapers and clippings that were full issues or too large were removed to the Oversize series.

Series V: Administrative, Faculty, and Personal Files

Though many of the records here might be considered “miscellaneous,” they document some of the day-to-day exercises required of a faculty member, administrator, mentor, academic interlocutor, and public figure. Compiled here are the advertisements, awards and prizes, reports, biographical sketches, lectureship notices, travel documents, course materials, committee work, boards and corporate councils’ records, event planning material, and conference memorabilia and ephemera.

Series VI: Audio/Visual material

The Audio/Visual series, dated from 1985 to 2009, is a small compilation of postcards, photographs, DVDs, and VHS tapes that document Becker's engagement with the larger world (field) of economics and government through recorded interviews, events, and programs. This series is divided into three subseries, including 1) Cards and Photographs, 2) DVDs, and 3) VHS tapes.

Series VII: Oversize

The items that were too large to fit with the other records of the collection are sequestered here as the Oversize series. This series is composed of 9 subseries, mirroring the series present above, including 1) Correspondence, 2) Publications, 3) Blogs and Columns, 4) Presentations, 5) Reference and Research Files, 6) Magazines, Newspapers, and Clippings, 7) Administrative, Faculty, and Personal files, 8) Audio/Visual, and 9) Restricted. The item in the restricted subseries is a newspaper clipping that was too large and had to be removed; however, given its content and new location within the collection, it is no longer restricted.
